Affecting Scene at the Sixth Cavalry Reunion.

VETERANS TOGETHER AGAIN

Annual Business Meeting, Reunion and Banquet of the Sixth Michigan-It Was a Joyous Occasion.

The sixth annual reunion of the Sixth Michigan cavairy was held you terday at Elka' hall on South Tonia street. The hall was well filed, about 100 veterane with about one-half as many women relatives being present. Before the business session began, an hour was spent renewing old acquaintances and refighting every battle from the time the Sixth left Grand Rapids in 1862, under Col. George Gray and Lieut.-Col. R. A. Alger until it was mustered out in 1865, after having served through the brilliant campaigns that made "Custer's Michigan Cavalry Brigade" renowned in the history of the great conflict

Gen. J. H. Kidd called the business meeting to order, and after Regimental Bugler Thomas Shaw had blown "drill call," Col. George G. Briggs of the eall." Col. George G. Briggs of the Seventh Michigan regiment was recognized and suggested a brigade reunion to be held on October 19, 1835, at Lansing. After some discussion the matter was referred to a committee composed of Maj. C. E. Storrs of Muskegon, Capt. A. T. Gould, city, and Capt. George W. Crawford of Big Rapids.

Many Were Absent. During roll call, which followed, the word "dead" was almost as frequently answered as "here," snowing that the ranks were fast being thinned out. During the call General Kidd read a letter announcing the death of Chaplain Greely, which took place in Gilmont, New Hampshire, October 25.

Col. H. E. Thompson was called for, and as he took the chair Tommy shaw, in a few well chosen words, told the story of a charge on the Gettys.

the story of a charge on the Gettys-burg battle field, when Col. Thompson was so severely wounded, and as he laid on the field he called for his laid on the field he called for his bugler to stay with him. As the rebels had captured Tom's hat he took an old silk handkerchief from Colonel Thompson's (then captain) body, and bound it around his head. After telling in graphic words the story of Company A's awful charge against the "Black Horse" cavalry, commanded by General Wade Hampton, and Captain Thompson's part in the historic event, he presented Colonel Thompson with the old handkerchief, which had been perforated with bullets which had lodged in Colonel Thompson's body.

An Affecting Scene.

Colonel Thompson was completely overcome, and could scarcely respond. After he had made a brief speech, he fell upon the neck of his old friend Tommy and the two old friends drawing their chairs together, lived over again that awful night on the battle field.

General Kidd then told his story of the charge that has made Company A and Colonel Thompson famous. He said that for the record and glory of that charge he would give all the socalled honor and glory he had achieved during the war.

The election of officers resulted in each of the old officers being unant-mously re-elected by acciamation.

They are as follows:

President, General Kidd, Ionia.

Secretary, J. H. Dennis, Hasting.

Treasurer, L. J. Barnard, Ionia. The committee appointed by the chair reported in favor of holding the next annual reunion at Lansing, October 18. The report was adopted. The session was ended by a song from Comrade Fields. General Kidd then ordered Bugler Shaw to blow the retreat, but Shaw said he never had to blow a retreat for the Sixth and didn't know the notes. The time between the business sesson and the bunquet was taken up with general sociabilities at the Eagle with general sociabilities at the Eagle leap year dance on Friday. On dit hotel. About 250 persons sat down at several engagements are soon to be an-

The mayor congratulated the Sixth cavalrymen on their record as soldiers and their ability as citizens, and welcomed them. General Alger, in reply, said, "The members of the Sixth and stafriends return to you their thanks for your kind words. It was here in this beautiful city that the Sixth was both. Many years ago the men you see about you, Mr. Mayor, were boys wandering about the streets in blue; believing that the picnic begun here would be continued during the war. From the time the regiment left this city until it returned home in its shattered condition, no regiment had acquitted itself with more honor than the Sixth. If you could trace the graves of the 1,380 men we took out from here, you would see that the greater majority had been mustered to the other side. To all the members of the extn I extend my heartfelt wish for their future prosperity." Music and Speeches.

The Webber quartet sang "Hark the Merry Drum." General Alger then called on Gen. J. H. Kidd of Ionia, who responded to the toast, "The Michigan Cavalry Brigade at Cedar Grass," after which the quartet sang "Oh Happy Day."
